For Parents:

HOW TO TALK TO YOUR TEEN ABOUT QUITTING

Vape Cessation Affects Children and Parents

Quitting is a tough journey for anyone trying to stop vaping, but it can be especially challenging for teens. Nicotine addiction can affect their mood, focus, and overall well-being, making the process even more difficult. As parents, it's crucial to approach this topic with empathy and support, helping your teen navigate the challenges of quitting while fostering a positive and open relationship. Here's how you can help your teen quit vaping and why it's important.

WHY TEENS MAY HESITATE TO ASK FOR HELP

Fear of Punishment or Judgment: Many teens worry that admitting to vaping will lead to punishment or disappointment from parents. They may fear losing privileges or facing harsh consequences, which can make them hesitant to seek help.

Shame and Guilt: Teens may feel ashamed about their vaping habit, especially if they've been trying to hide it. This shame can prevent them from reaching out for support, as they may believe they should be able to quit on their own.

Belief They Should Handle It Themselves: Adolescence is a time when teens are striving for independence. They may think that asking for help is a sign of weakness or immaturity, and they want to prove that they can overcome their vaping habit without assistance.

Fear of Losing Vaping Friends as a Coping Tool: Vaping can be a social activity, and teens may fear losing their vaping friends if they quit. They may also use vaping as a way to cope with stress or anxiety, and they may not know how to cope without it.

Peer Influence and Social Image: Teens are highly influenced by their peers, and they may feel pressure to maintain a certain social image. They may fear that quitting vaping will make them appear weak or different from their friends.

Lack of Awareness About Resources: Some teens may not be aware of the resources available to help them quit vaping, such as counseling services or support groups. They may not know where to turn for help.

Underestimating Their Addiction: Many teens underestimate the addictive nature of nicotine. They may not realize how difficult it will be to quit vaping and may not seek help because they don't think they need it.

Fear of Withdrawal Symptoms: Teens may be afraid of the withdrawal symptoms they will experience when they quit vaping, such as irritability, anxiety, and cravings. They may not know how to manage these symptoms and may feel overwhelmed by the prospect of quitting.

Not Wanting to Disappoint Parents: Teens may not want to disappoint their parents by admitting that they have been vaping. They may fear that their parents will be disappointed in them or that they will lose their trust.

Understanding these possible feelings can help you approach the topic with sensitivity and empathy, creating a safe space for your teen to open up about their vaping habit and seek the support they need. The goal is to work with your teen, not against them, and to help them overcome their addiction.

TIPS FOR EMPATHETIC AND EFFECTIVE CONVERSATIONS

Choose the Right Time and Place: Find a private, comfortable setting where you won't be interrupted. Avoid bringing it up when you're angry or when your teen is stressed.

Stay Calm and Non-Judgmental: Approach the conversation with a calm and supportive attitude. Avoid accusatory language or lectures. Remember, your goal is to understand, not to punish.

Ask, Don't Assume: Start by asking open-ended questions about their vaping habits. Ask them how they started, what they enjoy about it, and what challenges they're facing in trying to quit.

Begin with Sensitivity, Not Accusation: Instead of saying "I know you're vaping," try "I've noticed you've been spending a lot of time outside lately, and I'm concerned about your health." This approach is less confrontational and more likely to open a dialogue.

Don't Make It a Lecture: Avoid delivering a long speech filled with facts and figures. Instead, engage in a two-way conversation where you listen more than you talk.

Acknowledge Their Feelings and Reasons: Validate your teen's feelings and reasons for vaping. Acknowledge that it can be difficult to quit and that they may be experiencing withdrawal symptoms. Show that you understand their perspective.

Avoid Blame and Shame Tactics: Blaming or shaming your teen will only make them defensive and less likely to open up. Instead, focus on the positive aspects of quitting, such as improved health and increased energy.

Express Confidence in Them: Remind your teen that you believe in their ability to quit. Share examples of times when they've overcome challenges in the past. Let them know that you're there to support them every step of the way.

Set Clear Expectations Without Ultimatums: You can set clear expectations about your teen's vaping habits, but avoid using ultimatums or threats. Instead, work together to develop a plan that you both agree on. For example, you might say, "I'd like you to try to quit vaping for a month. If you're struggling, we'll find other ways to help you."

Involve Them in Setting Goals: Collaborate with your teen to set realistic goals for quitting. Break down the process into smaller, manageable steps. Celebrate their successes along the way, no matter how small.

"How Is It Not Working?": Instead of asking "Why haven't you quit yet?" ask "How is it not working?" This shifts the focus from blame to problem-solving. It acknowledges that quitting is a process and that there may be obstacles along the way.

Keep the Conversation Going: Quitting vaping is a process, and it may take multiple attempts. Don't give up if your teen relapses. Continue to offer support and encouragement. Remind them that you're there to help them through the ups and downs.

EXAMPLE CONVERSATION STARTERS AND DIALOGUES

Disclaimer: It may be not have a supportive environment. Some conversations may require professional intervention. Please consider your child's safety and well-being.

DIALOGUE 1: DISCOVERING YOUR TEEN IS VAPING

Scenario: A mother finds her teenage son hiding in his room, vaping. She confronts him, and he initially denies it, but then admits to vaping.

Mother: (Knocking on the door) Can I come in? I smell something strange, and I'm worried.

Son: (Hesitantly opening the door) It's nothing, Mom. Just... stuff.

Mother: (Entering the room and seeing the vape) What is that? Are you vaping?

Son: (Trying to hide the vape) No, it's not what you think.

Mother: (Firmly) Don't lie to me. I saw it. Are you vaping nicotine?

Son: (Sighing) Yeah, I guess I am. But it's not a big deal. Everyone does it.

Mother: (Concerned) That's not true. Vaping is harmful, and it's addictive. I'm disappointed that you're doing this.

Son: (Defensively) It's not like it's that bad. It's safer than smoking.

Mother: (Calmly) That's not the point. I'm worried about your health. I want to understand why you started vaping in the first place.

Son: (Shrugging) I don't know. My friends were doing it, and I thought it looked cool.

Mother: (Nodding) I understand that peer pressure can be strong. But you're smart enough to make your own decisions. I'm here to help you quit if you want to.

Son: (Surprised) You're not going to punish me?

Mother: (Gently) No, I'm not going to punish you. I want to work with you to find a way to stop. Are you willing to try?

Son: (Hesitantly) I guess so. I don't like how it makes me feel sometimes, like I'm always thirsty or my head hurts.

Mother: (Encouragingly) Those are common withdrawal symptoms. We can talk to your doctor about ways to manage them. We can also find some healthy alternatives to help you cope with stress.

Son: (Relieved) Okay, I'm willing to try.

Mother: (Hugging him) I'm so proud of you for being honest with me. We'll get through this together.

DIALOGUE 2: ONGOING MONITORING AND DEALING WITH RELAPSE

Scenario: A father, who has successfully helped his teenage daughter quit vaping, notices some concerning behavior. He suspects she might be relapsing and decides to have a conversation with her to check in and see how she's doing.

Father: (Knocking on his daughter's door) Hey, sweetheart, can I come in for a minute?

Daughter: (Looking up from her phone) Sure, Dad. What's up?

Father: (Entering the room and sitting down) I've been thinking about you and how proud I am of you for quitting vaping. It's a big deal.

Daughter: (Smiling) Thanks, Dad. It was tough, but I'm glad I did it.

Father: (Observing her closely) I've noticed you've been a little more irritable lately, and you've been spending more time in your room. Is everything okay?

Daughter: (Defensively) I'm fine. Just stressed about school.

Father: (Gently) I understand that school can be stressful, but I'm worried that it might be more than that. Are you sure you're not thinking about vaping again?

Daughter: (Hesitantly) Well, I've had a few thoughts about it, but I haven't actually done it.

Father: (Nodding) I appreciate you being honest with me. It's normal to have those thoughts, but it's important to remember why you quit in the first place. Do you remember how much better you felt when you weren't vaping?

Daughter: (Sighing) Yeah, I remember. I just feel like everyone around me is doing it, and it's hard to say no.

Father: (Empathetically) I know it's tough, but you're stronger than you think. We've been through this together, and we can get through it again. Let's talk about some strategies you can use to avoid temptation.

Daughter: (Relieved) That would be helpful. I don't want to go back to feeling like I'm addicted.

Father: (Reassuringly) We'll figure it out together. Remember, I'm here for you, and I love you no matter what.

Daughter: (Hugging him) Thanks, Dad. I love you too.

SPECIAL NOTE FOR PARENTS WHO SMOKE OR ARE QUITTING TOO

If you're a parent who smokes and is trying to quit, you're not alone. Many parents struggle with nicotine addiction, and it can be challenging to navigate the process while also supporting your teen. Here's how you can approach this situation:

Be Honest and Open: Don't try to hide your own struggles with nicotine. Your teen will likely notice your behavior, and honesty can help build trust. Explain that you're also trying to quit and that you're facing challenges.

Lead by Example: Your actions speak louder than words. Show your teen that you're committed to quitting by avoiding smoking around them and in your home. Celebrate your own successes and share your strategies for coping with cravings.

Seek Support Together: Consider quitting together as a family. You can support each other, share resources, and hold each other accountable. Look for family-friendly cessation programs or support groups.

Avoid Hypocrisy: It's important to avoid sending mixed messages. If you're asking your teen to quit vaping, you can't continue smoking yourself. This can undermine your credibility and make it harder for your teen to take your advice seriously.

Focus on Your Own Journey: While you're supporting your teen, remember to prioritize your own quitting journey. Seek out resources and support for yourself, and don't be afraid to ask for help.